CANCER RESEARCH COLLECTION – APRIL 16, 17, 18, 2010

To study canine cancer, we have established a Canine Hereditary Cancer Consortium (CHCC). The CHCC will take advantage of new genetic resources and technologies that have been developed at Van Andel Research Institute to develop genetic screens, diagnostic tests, and treatments for hereditary canine cancers as well as gain insight into the biology of human disease. We will analyze collected DNA and RNA samples from dogs for genetic patterns that are associated with this disease. These patterns may form the basis of genetic tests that can tell us whether a particular dog is a carrier of a defective gene that will cause cancer. Also, these studies may provide important clues about cancer in people. Van Andel Research Institute staff, from Grand Rapids, Michigan, will be present to collect dna samples (blood and/or cheek sponges) for canine health and cancer research. There will be no charge for this, and participation is greatly appreciated.

Dr. Roe Froman DVM will be on site to collect samples
